NARUC Unveils Redesigned Website to Better Reflect Resources, Events and Information

WASHINGTON (February 28, 2024) — The National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners is thrilled to announce the launch of its new website, designed to provide enhanced accessibility and resources for its members and stakeholders.

The newly revamped website reflects NARUC's commitment to educating and providing resources to members and stakeholders across the public utility sectors. The user-friendly interface offers visitors easy navigation and access to valuable information about NARUC's mission, values, events, trainings and initiatives.

Key features of the new website include:

- Updated Main Navigation Menu: The website has an intuitive design, with a streamlined, logical organization of topics that allow easy access to relevant information.
- Event Calendar: The new calendar design makes it easier to view and register for conferences, trainings and webinars, organized by topic.
- User Dashboard: Anyone with a profile can access a personal dashboard that highlights committee assignments, meetings and resource links.
- Comprehensive Resources: NARUC's extensive collection of resources, including reports, publications and educational materials, is now more easily accessible online.
- News and Updates: The news feed on the home page provides timely information on NARUC's activities, important announcements through press releases and feature articles.

"We are excited to launch our redesigned website, which not only reflects months of hard work, it also reflects what our members need — easier access to the resources and information they need most," said NARUC President Julie Fedorchak, who noted the new website in her remarks during the Association's Winter Policy Summit in Washington, D.C. "Comments on our member survey last year placed a priority on training and suggested better organization of the myriad content we have available. NARUC has many events, publications and professional development resources that are available to our members and the broader regulatory community — it's important that we connect users to that information efficiently."

“The design is highly user friendly and supports our objectives to provide education, advocacy and training for our members,” said NARUC Executive Director Greg White. “Utility regulation is complex, and we consistently endeavor to provide clarity and understanding; fortunately, the new website reflects that goal.

The new site design was produced by Potomac Digitek in Gaithersburg, Md. NARUC invites members, stakeholders, industry experts and the public to explore the new website and discover the wealth of information and opportunities it offers at www.naruc.org.
